Medical applications. Harrison's Principles of Internal Medicine. However, in 1955 at Balliol College, Oxford, a senior Anatomy student, Adrian Searle, discovered haemorrhage disease in several rabbits following the use of unsterile needles to administer "bioplast" (a lethal blood group substance) to them. Apparently, introduction of the transfusion procedure had caused sepsis. The cause was recognized to be transmission of blood-borne agents from septic donors. Harrison and other scientists at Oxford University then established the condition's name as animal haemolytic disease of the newborn (AHDN) in order to differentiate it from the well-known type of AHDN previously described in humans. Harrison also rewrote some parts of his first book. The aim of the first work was to be as clear and simple as possible. He therefore simplified the original and included only three fundamental sections: Virtual slide (VS) study of medical anatomy. VS system allows the doctor to capture the three-dimensional anatomy of the body in a sequence of two-dimensional images, with interactive exploration of anatomic structures.

The VS images can be studied in a computer or on printed slides at any time and can be retrieved to study any slide.

Electroencephalography (EEG), a method to record the electrical activity of the brain. The first edition used colorful photographs for illustrations.
