To investigate whether the Olsson prediction rule can be used to predict the development of pressure ulcers. Prospective cohort study. 65-bed tertiary hospital in South-Eastern Norway. 300 consecutively admitted patients. The Olsson prediction rule was used to calculate the "pressure ulcer index", a numerical value to estimate the risk of a pressure ulcer. The ulcer index was registered in all beds in the patient's first day in the hospital. The time from admission to the first day with an ulcer index  $\geq 3$  was recorded as the "development time". Analgesia in the patient's first day in the hospital. Daily totals of perineal and spinal pressure ulcers. Data on 300 patients were analysed, 112 (37%) had a pressure ulcer developed. The mean "development time" was 15.6 days in patients who developed a pressure ulcer, compared with only 7.5 days in those who did not develop a pressure ulcer. The predicted risk was higher ( $P = 0.004$ ) in the patients who developed a pressure ulcer than in those who did not. Patients with risk factors for pressure ulcers had a significantly shorter time to development of pressure ulcers than those who did not have risk factors. The Olsson pressure ulcer index was used to predict the development of pressure ulcers, which was accurate enough to act as a checklist. The importance of regular pressure inspections should be stressed in order to reduce pressure ulcers.The Rapid City Police Department said the response to a rape suspect caused a disturbance at a Walmart in Rapid City Saturday. According to a statement released by the department, officers responded to Walmart's parking lot on Crawford Street about 10:30 a.m. Saturday. The department said when they arrived, they found the suspect's vehicle. "While officers were looking for the suspect, they observed that the man d0c515b9f4
